Regional Oral History Archives as an Honors Program Practice In Fall 2023, select faculty at Columbia College piloted an interdisciplinary honors course that taught students how to contextualize and preserve regional oral histories in South Carolina, culminating in the CC Oral History Project. Through a study of diverse oral traditions, the history and politics of public education in South Carolina, and narrative inquiry and analysis, honors students examined the history, significance, and methodology of recording oral histories with a particular focus on race in education across South Carolina. In this roundtable discussion, we aim to explore the outcomes of our pilot course and its implications for future honors course offerings with a focus on the inclusion of interdisciplinary experiential learning and the values, challenges, and ethics of having honors college students start and maintain an oral history archive. This discussion will highlight the use of an oral history archive as a method of capturing transitions and the social and physical positioning of students, including who they are as honors students and individuals. Further, we will consider students' interactions with interviewees and the ethics of collaborative inquiry.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 30, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 30, 2023 2:50:00	Brevard	PUB	Yes
Student Development Outside of the Honors Community A panel designed for other Honors students to learn how becoming involved outside of their Honors Communities can benefit their personal-development, future careers, and Honors programs. Featured talks from involved student leaders at the University of Louisiana Monroe on how their experiences with involvement have helped foster community between university organizations. An interactive panel discussion will seek to inspire other Honors students to seek leadership and communities outside of Honors.	Student	Mar 30, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 30, 2023 2:50:00	Independence	PUB	Yes
The Impact of Motivation in Honors Students in an Everchanging World The internal and external factors that determine our decisions are also known as elements of motivation. Motivation is the subject of research in many areas, particularly motivation as it applies to education. Within an honors community, we try to innovate and change the lives of scholars every day. Many honors students display a tendency for control and perfectionism which can be a double-edged sword in relation to their motivation. Others struggle to find focus within a wide range of interests. In an ever-changing world, it is important to understand what drives us and what doesn't. This presentation is a call to broaden our perspectives by understanding more about ourselves and each other; in it, we will consolidate Dr. Juan Antonio Alonso's research on the impact of student attitudes and classroom emotions in higher education with observations and experiences from students and faculty members of the UTC Honors College and the Innovation in Honors program in particular. This panel will consist of a participatory environment in which we discuss, compare, and contrast our findings with the attendees' experiences, ideas, and points of view.	Student	Mar 30, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 30, 2023 2:50:00	Kings	PUB	Yes

Legal Philosophy and Justice How we interpret legal documents is a reflection of our values. Whether we see the Constitution as a living or an enduring document depends on what we believe is important about structuring and facilitating our society. Oftentimes the values promoted by these ideologies are competing: individual liberty versus the common good, procedure versus outcome, tradition versus progress. Legal philosophies all purport to balance these things as necessary for the just world they envision. This panel will explore how different legal philosophies seek to achieve justice and safeguard certain values.	Student	Mar 30, 2023 3:00:00	Mar 30, 2023 3:50:00	Independence	PUB	Yes

Travel Study in Transition – SRHC Travel Consortium Travel study- especially international travel - can be a daunting prospect for students to consider and for faculty to organize and promote. This roundtable proposes to return to a conversation that began at last year's SRHC conference to discuss the possibilities, challenges, and benefits of building travel programs designed to share institutions' resources, student interest, and faculty expertise. One potential outcome of this roundtable might be the beginnings of a proposal to the create a travel study consortium. Other points of discussion will include the relationship between students studying abroad and their success in terms of performance and graduation rate. Attendees are encouraged to bring to the conversation discussion of their current and planned trips as well as questions and concerns about broad issues that pose challenges to successful cooperative initiatives among honors programs.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 30, 2023 3:00:00	Mar 30, 2023 3:50:00	Brevard	PUB	Yes

Assessment of Critical Thinking Skills and Habits of Mind	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 9:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 9:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes
Consistent with previous reports, the most recent survey of employers conducted by the Association of American Colleges and Universities revealed that critical thinking is one of the most important skills of graduates (AAC&amp;U, 2021). It ranked second with 60% of employers rating critical thinking as 'very important.' Like most programs, the Honors Scholar Program at High Point University is deeply invested in developing our students' critical thinking skills. As a way to assess this development, we are currently piloting the California Critical Thinking Skills Test (Insight Assessment, 2023). It evaluates overall critical thinking skills and several subskills (e.g., inference, deduction). However, the development of critical thinking skills only matters if students are motivated to use them. Thus, we are also piloting the California Critical Thinking Disposition Inventory (CCTDI) to assess the habits of mind needed to apply critical thinking skills (e.g., truth-seeking, open-mindedness, inquisitiveness). Although the CCTDI provides a comprehensive assessment of these habits, the inventory is costly and requires a substantial time investment. Thus, we are currently examining the relationship between the CCTDI and a free measure, the Assessment of Individual Motives Questionnaire (Bernard, Mills, Swenson, &amp; Walsh, 2006). This presentation will review program data that compares critical thinking skills and habits of mind of first- and fourth-year students both in the honors program and in the general population. We will also discuss the relationship between the CCTDI and the Individual Motives Questionnaire.
Euthanasia and The Global Context: How does Canada's developing Euthanasia program compare to other nation states	Student	Mar 31, 2023 9:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 9:50:00	Sharon	PUB	Yes
Euthanasia is the deliberate ending of a person's life to relieve suffering. This practice goes against everything many physicians stand for. In most areas, it is still illegal for a physician to perform euthanasia. Euthanasia has been legal in the Netherlands since 2001 and since then it has become legal in Switzerland, Spain, Belgium, Columbia, Australia, France, New Zealand, and in some jurisdictions in the USA. It is also legal in Canada, and the developing program is currently under expansion. The development of the modern euthanasia program in Canada began with Carter v Canada. In a unanimous decision, the court held that the criminal laws prohibiting euthanasia limited the right to life, liberty, and security of the person under section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In June 2016, the Canadian parliament passed federal guidelines allowing eligible Canadian adults to request medical assistance in dying (M.A.I.D.). On March 17, 2021, the parliament amended and loosened the guidelines for the program. These changes immediately took effect and generated some ethical and ideological debate worldwide. Opponents have emphasized that euthanasia is now presented as a clinical care option in Canada and is virtually unrestricted. For some, this raises many concerns, but others agree that the right to die with dignity should be guaranteed. This panel will use the expansion of Canada's euthanasia program as a lens to examine more recent ethical and ideological debates that have arisen surrounding euthanasia.

Speculative Fiction and Honors, Partners in Transition Led by an environmental physicist and a Victorianist, this session explores how speculative narratives offer honors students valuable opportunities to address issues and anxieties surrounding the modern world. Just as Honors has undergone a radical transformation in recent decades, so has the genre and the perception of speculative fiction. At its best, it can serve as a bridge between Honors' past and its future. The genre and its spin-offs have long been influential in reflecting, critiquing, and re-imagining major historical and ideological shifts and discoveries—from war to evolution to climate—that changed the world. The panelists share their teaching and co-curricular experiences in the HTC Honors College at Coastal Carolina University to illustrate how mega popular fantasy realms, populated with vampires or hobbits or kraken, provide accessible avenues for students to thinking critically and reflectively about geopolitical, environmental, and cultural events in the real world. Interdisciplinary by nature, speculative media capture a wide range of student interests and programs of study; moreover, themes can be adapted to fit diverse faculty areas of specialization, as well as to develop related co-curricular activities and communities. Roundtable participants are invited to share their own ideas and teaching experiences as we create a working list of literature, films, theory, video games, podcasts, etc. that is appropriate for creating or expanding a syllabus based on other worlds.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 9:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 9:50:00	Brevard	PUB	Yes

UReCA: The NCHC Journal of Undergraduate Research and Creative Activity UReCA: The NCHC Journal of Undergraduate Research and Creative Activity is a double-blind, student peer-reviewed journal created by a network of undergraduate honors students from across the United States. Research and creative work submissions are managed and published by a unique student editorial board and student production team who are instrumental in the selection of content and the development of the online product during each publication cycle. These students come from various personal and academic backgrounds that aid the journal in selecting and reviewing pieces from a large range of undergraduate work. This panel explores the experiential learning opportunities provided by developing and promoting a national journal. Editors will shed light on the intricacies of the editorial and publication processes as well as reflect on their personal growth and share how to get involved in UReCA.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 9:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 9:50:00	Harris	PUB	Yes

Interest Group Programming in the EKU Honors LLC: A Discussion  Abigail Estep (RA), Kylie Perry (RA), McKenzie Carrier (RA), and Dr. David Coleman (Executive Director of EKU Honors) will discuss our system of "Interest Group" programming in the Honors Living and Learning Community (LLC) at Eastern Kentucky University. For the current academic year, our LLC has four programming "interest groups," each headed by a team of two resident advisors. The four interest groups include: Outdoor Activities, Games, Food, and Crafts. The presentation will include images and discussion of LLC events which we organized for the Fall 2022 semester and for the current Spring 2023 semester. We understand that many Honors LLCs at other universities include community service programming and peer mentoring. To be sure, those things are part of the life of EKU Honors, but we organize them through different mechanisms (peer mentoring through our honors orientation process, and community service through our honors student organization EHA, as well as service-learning honors seminars). In our institutional culture, we have accordingly found it best to focus LLC programming on extracurricular activities. Our unique interest group programming for the LLC is all about giving our students a fun experience while also helping them network and get to know their peers and professors even better. Dr. David Coleman will conclude the discussion with some reflections on how our LLC functions within the "big picture" of the life of EKU Honors. We will also invite audience members to share their experiences and ideas about honors residence programming at their own universities.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 10:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 10:50:00	Harris	PUB	Yes

The Annual UWF Kugelmann Honors Program Trip to Montgomery: Planning, Experiencing, and Assessing a DEI Initiative in Florida  Every year, the University of West Florida Kugelmann Honors Program takes a day trip to Montgomery, AL to visit the Legacy Museum and the National Memorial for Peace and Justice. This engagement is a hallmark demonstration of our commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion. As a program, we invest heavily in this experience to get students outside of the classroom and grapple with difficult histories that inform our regional and national communities today. While this experience is a hallmark of the first-year experience, we actively involve various institutional and community partners in this trip. This year, we embedded an intense reflection component and an assessment to gauge the efficacy of the exercise from a pedagogical perspective. In this session, we provide our institutional and sociopolitical context, discuss the logistics and lessons learned, and present the quantitative and qualitative results of our assessment. We also provide opportunities for participants to troubleshoot their own challenges and brainstorm similar ways to engage students, campus partners, and community stakeholders strategically and effectively.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 10:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 10:50:00	Sharon	PUB	Yes

The Ins-and-Outs Of Serial Killers The psychology and correctional treatment of those defined as "serial killers" spans across several mental illnesses, challenging developmental situations, and imprisonment strategies that are considerably different from criminals serving time for misdemeanors and petty crime. Psychopathy and sociopathy are the more notorious illnesses associated with serial killers, but there is more to the motivation and psychology of these criminals than what meets the eyes. In addition to how these killers developed through childhood and adolescent years, there is also influence from current media that either glorifies or paints different pictures of the crimes committed or of those who commit them. This can be exceedingly dangerous because the current populations consume vast amounts of online media, and on top of that, abnormal topics interests most people, which could lead to undesirable outcomes. This panel will give a broad overview of the correlations and theories of how serial killers are "born," as well as showing how these homicidal repeat offenders are being rehabilitated and treated as idols in current media when they should not be.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 10:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 10:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes

College During Covid: How Honors Helped Us Find Our Footing Transitioning into college is hard for any class, but August of 2020 was a transition into university life that none of us expected or really knew how best to handle. Amongst a sea of judgment calls and cancellations, we believe that the UTC Honors College excelled in creating a community that helped ease the transition to university and into honors. This topic of how honors can help ease the transition into university life is important because it establishes another element of importance that honors programs have on campus. In this panel, we will discuss the uniqueness of being a freshman during COVID, but not focus so much on the challenges of the pandemic, but rather highlight how various aspects of the UTC Honors College helped us feel a sense of community during a time when community was nearly impossible to create. This community provided us with skills and experiences that have carried on throughout our time in honors.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 11:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 11:50:00	Brevard	PUB	Yes

Higher Education in an Age of Transition Higher education in America is going through a series of challenges and transitions in the first decades of the twenty-first century. Some of the challenges - financial, equitable access, social justice, academic freedom and free speech on campuses - directly affect access to Honors education and student engagement in Honors. Three student panelists will discuss their research into some of these challenges. Access and Affordability As higher education creates new programs and initiatives, while continuing to support those already in place, we have seen a shift in the value placed on the components of higher education. As programs and departments try to defend their current level of funding, we see that many institutions within the realm of higher education have transitioned their funding distribution to reflect profitability. Correspondingly, we see that Honors education is suffering in this fight for funding. Diversity, Selectivity, and Justice In an age constantly striving for a diverse educational environment, college admissions is at the forefront of the process. With much of the landscape of admissions changing - through the current debate over affirmative action programs, holistic admissions, and the move to test-optional - the Honors college can be a bastion of both selective admissions and diversity. From Academic Freedom to "Wokism" Academic freedom was once a valued and protected component of higher education fostering learning, curiosity, and discussion within the academic sphere. In recent years, we have gone from restricting only non-academic topics in classrooms to the perception that politically conservative views are being restricted in classrooms and across campuses. True or not, this perception has resulted in lawmakers attempting to forbid concepts that are deemed divisive through denial of tenure and even termination of "woke" faculty. These challenges confront Honors faculty and students today and maybe for decades to come.	Student Panel	Mar 31, 2023 11:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 11:50:00	Harris	PUB	Yes

Underrepresented Minority (URM) Students Overcoming the Challenges of Undergraduate Research at a Historically White Institution The T34 Undergraduate Research Program at NC State has achieved success in its first three of years of implementation. The National Institute of Health (NIH) grant funded program is a collaboration between the University Honors Program (UHP) and the Comparative Medicine Institute (CMI) at NC State University. The program is intended for high achieving Underrepresented Minority (URM) students who indicate a desire to obtain a PhD in the Biomedical field. The students in this program face the same challenges that URM students have faced at Historically White Institutions (HWIs). These challenges include unconscious bias, microaggressions, social isolation, imposter syndrome, research and academic balance, mentor fit, self-efficacy, and the lack of developing a true science identity. Some of these challenges have magnified post-pandemic. As students begin to reenter the new normal of higher education and undergraduate research, science socialization issues for URM students have been exacerbated. Our program has begun to make inroads into reducing these barriers by developing diverse (UR and non-UR) cohorts of graduate students and undergraduates where these barriers are addressed in a safe and constructive manner. This contributes to a gradual change in culture and a reduction of barriers such as unconscious bias and imposter syndrome, as well as many others. The benefits of this program are lucrative and can substantially alter the path for URM students who want to pursue a PhD.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 11:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 11:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes

I'm not creative but I created!	Student	Mar 31, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 2:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes
What does it mean to be creative? Is this even a valid question to ask? This panel will explore issues in creativity and the processes involved in creating by reflecting on experiences encountered while fulfilling a 'Creative Project' assignment as part of a nine-credit interdisciplinary honors course. In characteristic fashion, the only assignment instruction given by Dr. Kawai Shiu was simply to "create something". There were no restrictions with regard to medium or scope. Such freedom and lack of formal directions was often met with initial resentment, puzzlement, and above all, fear, or some combination of these. "I am not creative" was a common statement, especially from students pursuing majors in the sciences, heard by Dr. Shiu in his initial meetings with students on their projects. But the final projects painted a very different picture. They included: music compositions ranging from rap songs to compositions embracing indeterminacy; start-up business proposals; simulated supreme court opinions; BLM earrings; font designs; soccer training video; short films; podcasts;

Who cares if you are creative or not as long as you create!

The AI (ChatGPT) Conundrum: "The Devil You Know Is Better Than the Devil You Don't"  Honors directors, deans, and a faculty development director of a college teaching and learning center team up to lead an interactive panel discussion of the impact of AI technology on writing and learning. Facilitators will outline both challenges and opportunities in dealing with AI-generated content and will share examples of AI-generated information produced by platforms such as ChatGPT, Cactus, Jasper, Rytr, and numerous others. Rather than dwelling on issues of plagiarism and cheating, the focus of discussion will be on how honors educators can use the technology creatively and positively to enhance learning, deepen critical thinking and research skills, and improve writing and other academic work. Another central question of the session is when engaging with AI may be beneficial and when AI may be limiting. Participants will be encouraged to showcase their varied experiences with AI and suggest new ways of harnessing the power of such tools.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 2:50:00	Sharon	PUB	Yes

The Familiar Face of a Fellow: The Impact of Peer-to-Peer Mentorship in First-Year Honors Curriculum  The NC State University Honors Program (UHP) employs 10-15 Honors Fellows each academic year whose primary responsibility is the mentorship of and engagement with first-year students enrolled in Honors (HON) seminars. Honors Fellows have direct involvement with their peers both in and outside of the classroom. In particular, they provide co-curricular programming for first-year students that connects to and extends course content and helps support academic, cultural, and social development. Additionally, the Fellows serve as mentors to these first-year students and aid in their social and physical transition to university life and the Honors community. Our panel will share the successes and challenges of this role, focusing specifically on the Fall 2022 cohort of UHP Fellows. Members of this cohort will describe their experiences in the position and how we were able to effectively support the personal development of new UHP students. Further, we will present and reflect on data gathered from first-year student listening sessions and HON seminar instructor feedback to illustrate the necessity for these kinds of peer mentors and how they are distinctly different from other student staff positions on campus. Finally, we will engage the audience in discussion regarding areas for growth and future directions for the Fellow position and how other institutions might consider and/or adopt a similar approach.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 2:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 2:50:00	Harris	PUB	Yes

British Parliament: How it Works and Who Holds the Power Many Americans do not fully understand the nuances and bowels of the American system of government. Even fewer have a firm grasp of the idea of the British Parliamentary System, despite it having a great deal of influence on the world. Recent events such as the resignation of Boris Johnson and Liz Truss have brought reshuffles to the Conservative government and have puzzled American onlookers. What do these mean for the country on the international stage and how does the potential transience of parliamentary administrations affect England's foreign and domestic policy? We explore these questions and more such as what role the monarchy plays in the governance of the country. We will look at the role of the political parties in governance and how their dominance affects parliamentary action. We will compare the United States and the United Kingdom's governments and examine how the fused legislative and executive roles of the Prime Minister differ from the strictly executive role of the President. Finally, we will look at the current political climate and issues in the United Kingdom such as immigration and energy, before offering a look into the future of the governance of the country.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 3:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 3:50:00	Harris	PUB	Yes

From International to Global: An Honors Track Reimagined In order to remove barriers to the successful completion of honors and broaden student interest in honors, Lloyd International Honors College has transitioned its International Honors track to Global Honors. As the student body of UNC Greensboro increasingly has shifted to students with substantial work or care responsibilities at home and students with completed associates degrees, the requirements for International Honors needed to be revised. Currently, common barriers to the successful completion of International Honors include the requirement to study abroad, the completion of a foreign language at the proficiency level (204), and the completion of thirteen credit hours of honors coursework. Global Honors aims to ease the curricular pressure of International Honors by making the curriculum more customizable and to mitigate the curricular, financial, and administrative challenges of study abroad by encouraging participation in other campus, local, and international experiential learning opportunities. The curricular load can be reduced by half: students are required to take seven credit hours of honors coursework in any mode and are required to complete a foreign language through the 102 level. Finally, students are required to accumulate 100 points of Global Honors Experiences. They can choose these experiences from a menu of approved opportunities including, but not limited to: additional honors or language courses, study abroad, community service, internships, developmental leadership programming, undergraduate research, fellowships, and conference participation. This presentation will explore the reasoning behind both the choices made in transitioning International Honors to Global Honors and the choices in constructing Global Honors.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 3:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 3:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes

Increasing Student Engagement in Honors There have been many transitions for people in the past few years, especially students on college campuses. Students have had to navigate online classes, joining organizations virtually, making friends in a difficult setting and many other challenges. One of the biggest things students need is a community and what better community is there than Honors. However; because, of these virtual settings and unconventional starts to college, there has been a lack of student engagement. The lack of student engagement has forced administrators, organizations, and Honors programs and colleges to reimagine how to get and increase student engagement to continue to create the community and family atmosphere that they have been providing for so long. This panel will feature 4 student leaders from North Carolina Agricultural &amp; Technical State University who have been a part of increasing the engagement for the University Honors College. This panel will focus on event planning, mentorship, wellness and interaction that will increase student engagement on your respective campuses. Throughout this panel, there will be facts and anecdotes, interactive action planning and questions.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 3:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 3:50:00	Sharon	PUB	Yes

Building "Study Away" Programs in Honors: A Kugelman Honors Program Case Study The COVID-19 pandemic canceled many study abroad programs within higher education. Additionally, for many institutions, any form of travel was not possible throughout the pandemic, creating entire generations of students who had little travel experience. After several years of this disruption, the Kugelman Honors Program at the University of West Florida decided to create an innovative solution to the lack of travel opportunities provided to students of the pandemic. Staff wanted to create a safe way for students who had not been able to travel to have an high-impact learning experience involving travel before graduation. From this discussion, we developed the idea for a study away experience, designed for students whose lives had been disrupted by the pandemic. After careful consideration, planning, and discussion, the idea became a reality. For ten days in the Summer 2022 semester, students and staff studied in Washington, D.C., giving students hands-on opportunities to explore the capital and think about how the design of the city reflects the American values. Specifically, the curricular component focused students on the art and architecture of the city as an expression of American national identity. At the conclusion of the semester, students were challenged to critically reflect on this experience in reference to their own identity. This workshop, hosted by staff of the Kugelman Honors Program, will discuss logistics, curriculum design, and lessons learned by this experience. Participants will learn strategies for planning their own unique study away experiences for their own institutions.	Faculty/Admi	Mar 31, 2023 4:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 4:50:00	Morehead	PUB	Yes

Honors in Transition: Program to College...Oh wait In 2022, I began a formal internal process to transition from a program to a college; however, this process was significantly curtailed by a variety of internal and external forces. The Application of Graphene in the Energy Industry Graphene, a thin carbon allotrope, has shown promise in aiding numerous processes in the energy sector. New graphene technology is impacting energy sources like oil, gas, wind, and solar power. The material has a high tensile strength and stability due to the strong bonds between its carbon atoms. This strength and stability make its integration into the energy sector widespread with its number of possible applications constantly increasing. Wind turbine blades use graphene as a shielding agent against erosion, space technology utilizes the material in solar cells, and the oil industry uses graphene as a protectant during drilling. The allotrope is seen as having great potential in these sectors, with its greatest potential coming from its ability to be made into composite materials and thus the products made from them. Through investigation, graphene's potential uses extend into other aspects of the power and energy sector like transistor, battery, and supercapacitor production. In addition to its numerous applications, the material is used so widely in part due to its environmentally friendly nature. Carbon's presence in the natural environment allows for graphene to be implemented cleanly and sustainably. This panel seeks to present graphene's highly diverse nature and its applications in the energy sector.	Student	Mar 31, 2023 4:00:00	Mar 31, 2023 4:50:00	Sharon	PUB	Yes

Brenda Tindal is the Faculty of Arts &amp; Sciences (FAS) Chief Campus Curator and Executive Director of the Harvard Museums of Science &amp; Culture at Harvard University. She currently leads the public-facing entity of seven FAS research museums, including the Harvard Museum of Natural History; the Peabody Museum of Archaeology &amp; Ethnology; the Collection of Historical Scientific Instruments; the Harvard Museum of the Ancient Near East; the Museum of Comparative Zoology; the Mineralogical &amp; Geological Museum; and the Harvard University Herbaria. In 2023, she was appointed the University's inaugural chief campus curator. In this role, Tindal has primary programmatic oversight of visual culture, historical signage, public art, digital content-creation, and responsibility for stewarding a more dynamic and inclusive interpretive ecology across the FAS campus—a portfolio of nearly 300 academic and public-facing facilities with 11 million square feet of usable landscape and structural spaces. Prior to joining the Faculty of Arts &amp; Sciences at Harvard, Tindal was the founding Director of Education &amp; Engagement at the International African American Museum (IAAM), where she launched its inaugural education, programming, and global outreach and community engagement initiatives. At the IAAM, she also played a key curatorial role—advancing the interpretive plans for the overarching visitor experience, content and media development, and scholarly review for the museum's eight permanent exhibitions. In 2003, Tindal launched her career at Levine Museum of the New South, where she was part of the curatorial team that organized the groundbreaking exhibit, Courage: The Carolina Story that Changed America, which was awarded the 2006 National Medal for Museum &amp; Library Service—the nation's highest honor for institutions that make significant and exceptional contributions to their community. Tindal returned to the Levine Museum as Staff Historian and Senior Vice President of Research &amp; Collections in 2015, where she led the curation of the pioneering exhibition and community engagement initiative, K(NO)W Justice, K(NO)W Peace (2017) and "Splendid Service": Camp Greene &amp; The Making of a New South City (2017). A seasoned museum leader, curator, educator, and public historian, Tindal's career trajectory has been defined by a deep commitment to expanding the social impact of cultural and academic institutions through innovative programming, exhibit development, curriculum and instructional design, research, and place-making and community engagement consultation. In this vein, Tindal has prioritized purpose-driven initiatives that center on historical reckoning, restorative justice, and memorialization, which have entailed contributions to the Princeton &amp; Slavery project at Princeton University; Museums as Sites for Social Action (MASS Action) Toolkit; The Atlantic magazine's 2017 Race + Justice Summit; the City of Boston's Faneuil Hall exhibition on slavery; the National Center for Civil and Human Rights' Without Sanctuary lynching exhibition; and the Harvard &amp; Legacy of Slavery Memorial Project, to name a few. Tindal holds degrees in History &amp; Africana Studies from the University of North Carolina Charlotte and American Studies from Emory University. She has been the recipient of numerous awards and fellowships, including the 2011-2012 IMLS Fellowship at Princeton University; the 2020 Southeastern Museum Conference Leadership Award; and in 2022 she was inducted as a Phi Beta Kappa Foundation Member. The UNC Charlotte Honors College staff includes several advisors who assist students with co-curricular, curricular, and pre-health professionalization needs. Our period of transitions in and coming out of the pandemic have been accompanied with office growth, change, and (re)development, with strengthened commitments to our core keywords of "Curiosity, Community, City." On the other side of this "reboot," University Honors Program students consult with the Honors Advisor, who aids students with high-impact Honors Core Experiences (e.g. volunteering, internships, study-abroad programs) and the Scholars Advisor, who provides assistance with coursework, registration, and progress to degree, along with external scholarships. Working with more advanced students pursuing non-nursing health professions, meanwhile, the Pre-Health Advisor coordinates a campus-wide orientation, advising, and guidance program. Altogether, our advising team collaborates to assist Charlotte's high-achieving students towards high-impact habits of learning and doing. Our round table will provide a joint picture of our responsibilities, with accounts of particular areas of success and challenges over the last few years.
